Yeah, Sniveling Cunt, your mom releases her lip lock on Wiseman's cock on Monday morning.

the lie is your claim you are not a gay bashing bigot

kook

This can be SO simple. I should have thought of this weeks ago.
I'll simply x-post Marks comments to two or three of the extreme Muslim newsgroups and be sure that they realize he is a bisexual Jew. Wiseman already posted Marks address....
It should take four or five months, six tops, before a Camel Jockey or two pays Mark a visit. There are lots of em in Dearborn, which is less than a three hour drive from Chassell.

Why didn't I think of this sooner?

is Amy Fireproof?" means Steve has just lied obviously that means very little else is worth ntoing and as should be obvious very little else will get done by steve will

all he has to do is STOP lying

stoping claiming my wife is male

stop calling me a child molestor

stop acussing me of welfare fraud

stop using libelous accusations against others to harrass them

apologize for calling my DAD a rapist

apologize for lying about the non existance of the 47th my old unit

apologize for lying about the non existance of the 214 fa of which it was part since steve will no doubt try to ja this message it will be repated a few time t insure it get through

Well, as long as you mean it. Once you're gone, we(tinw) can finally nominate (with some hope of getting them elected) other k00ks for the offices you've been hogging. Oh, wait, you've never held office. Well, hurry up, damn you! You have less than a year, so you'd better get serious about this. You have offices to hog, you know.

Fire Chief was the regular grade sold by Texaco. Their premium was Sky Chief.

In the 1950s, Sunoco sold only one grade of gasoline, which was supposed to be a "near premium". Its gimmick was that it was dyed blue, whereas other gasolines were yellow to red. In the 1960s, its super-premium was Sunoco 260 from the "custom blend" pump.

I know a Tech who refuses to attempt to upgrade until code is dropped.
Yet he claims to have "very conservative values". He also believes that hamfests should carry more non-amateur radio related things, like old movie VCR tapes and Glenn Miller recordings.

He refuses to attend any amateur radio club meeting or gathering. He wanted to have a non-amateur radio related picnic gathering of radio amateurs on the Saturday of Field Day.

Nobody around here considers him to be a ham. We consider him to be a "CB-Plus".

So far, you've not been able to disprove a single thing I've said

So why do you keep uttering a threat in an archived public record,

"is Amy fireproof" is an implicit threat of battery by arson, Morkie.

No amount of pontification on your part will change that.

Well what, Morkie?

Unless you are asking BRAIN...?!?!

He is, afterall, the one who has yet to comment as to why he's made anti-Amateur Radio comments in an Amateur Radio forum.

LONG SNIP OF STUFF MORKIE QUOTED BUT DIDN'T COMMENT ON

"is Amy Fireproof?" means Steve has just lied obviously that means very little else is worth ntoing and as should be obvious very little else will get done by steve will

all he has to do is STOP lying

stoping claiming my wife is male

stop calling me a child molestor

stop acussing me of welfare fraud

stop using libelous accusations against others to harrass them

apologize for lying about the non existance of the 47th my old unit

apologize for lying about the non existance of the 214 fa of which it was part since steve will no doubt try to ja this message it will be repated a

Huh?

Let me see if I get this right...

You have AGAIN threatened to SPAM the radio NG's unless you get what you want.

Is that about right?

> all he has to do is STOP lying

May if I started...?!?!

Stop making inappropriate acts with minors.

What libelous accusations?

> apologize for calling my DAD a rapist

You're here, aren't you?

> apologize for lying about the non existance of the 47th my old unit

Since you were never in the Armed Forces, no lie can exist about "your" unit.

Nope. I already acknowledged the error.

Oh, the message got through, alright...

"Mark C. Morgan is mentally ill."

stoping claiming my wife is male

stop calling me a child molestor

stop acussing me of welfare fraud

stop using libelous accusations against others to harrass them

apologize for calling my DAD a rapist

apologize for lying about the non existance of the 47th my old unit

repated yet again but I add to that you need to stop lying and by claiming I have threatened your wife

I jokingly suggest YOU threaten her safety by lying so much

If I was standing in the street with a possible molotov youd might have apoint but instaed you are just lying some more becuase the ISP will not retrain the trollss anymore which means the troll crosspost everything every where this set is relitively mild and at least is confined to radio NGs

obviosuly that i t has gone on long enough means shaw is yet another ISP that does not enforce it's ToS bad what are we going to do about it?

sadly t has come to the state that the only way to stop these nutjob is murder which for the meow bunch seems still a it extreme even leaving

The truth is that Mark C. Morgan has just stated that he intends to render the RRA newsgroups unusable until he get's his ego salved.

Selfish brat that he is, this should come as no surprise to anyone.

> all he has to do is STOP lying

The truth is that Mark C. Morgan is the one with "truth" issues, and that he has yet to prove anyone else "guilty" of lying. Morkie admits to, yea even brags about lying.

> stoping claiming my wife is male

The truth is that Mark C. Morgan is an admitted sexual pervert, that he is gay, and there is, so far, no evidence that he's invoved in
a legitimate heterosexual relationship.

The truth is Mark C. Morgan has it within his IMMEDIATE power to correct this if it's untrue, but it's obvious that is't NOT untrue.

The truth is that Mark C. Morgan was under investigation for inappropriate acts with a minor. This was not my doings. However I am not the one who keeps bringing this up...Mark C. Morgan is... So the question begs to be asked..."What is Mark C. Morgan afraid of if the accusations are false...?!?!"

The truth is that Mark C. Morgan accepts welfare services
all-the-while bragging about his $200K-a-year home business.

THAT is welfare fraud.

The truth is that Mark C. Morgan has just stated that he intends to render the RRA newsgroups unusable until he get's his ego salved.

Selfish brat that he is, this should come as no surprise to
anyone.

> all he has to do is STOP lying

The truth is that Mark C. Morgan is the one with "truth" issues,
and that he has yet to prove anyone else "guilty" of lying. Morkie admits to, yea even brags about lying.

> stoping claiming my wife is male

The truth is that Mark C. Morgan is an admitted sexual pervert, that he is gay, and there is, so far, no evidence that he's invoved in
a legitimate heterosexual relationship.

The truth is Mark C. Morgan has it within his IMMEDIATE power to correct this if it's untrue, but it's obvious that is't NOT untrue.

The truth is that Mark C. Morgan was under investigation for inappropriate acts with a minor. This was not my doings. However I am not the one who keeps bringing this up...Mark C. Morgan is... So the question begs to be asked..."What is Mark C. Morgan afraid of if the accusations are false...?!?!"

The truth is that Mark C. Morgan accepts welfare services
all-the-while bragging about his $200K-a-year home business.

THAT is welfare fraud.

Mark C. Morgan should have kept his mouth closed.

The truth is that Mark C. Morgan (at least the Mark C. Morgan who holds Amateur Radio call KB9RQZ...there are two LEGITIMATE soldiers named Mark C. Morgan) was never in the Untied States Army...Or anyone else's Army as far as I can tell.

The truth is that this was an error already acknowledged. Mark C. Morgan is not due an "apology" for this error.

Mark C. Morgan should have kept his mouth closed.

The truth is that Mark C. Morgan (at least the Mark C. Morgan who holds Amateur Radio call KB9RQZ...there are two LEGITIMATE soldiers named Mark C. Morgan) was never in the Untied States Army...Or anyone else's Army as far as I can tell.

The truth is that Mark C. Morgan has just stated that he intends to render the RRA newsgroups unusable until he get's his ego salved.

Selfish brat that he is, this should come as no surprise to anyone.

The truth is that Mark C. Morgan is the one with "truth" issues,
and that he has yet to prove anyone else "guilty" of lying. Morkie

The truth is that Mark C. Morgan is an admitted sexual pervert, that he is gay, and there is, so far, no evidence that he's invoved in
a legitimate heterosexual relationship.

The truth is Mark C. Morgan has it within his IMMEDIATE power to correct this if it's untrue, but it's obvious that is't NOT untrue.

Sorry... my bad... is it 35 now? I stand corrected.

Back to the chant...

If you can't do 35wpm, you should stay off the bands!!
Seriously people, think about it... do you want blood on your hands because you're a slow-beepin loser?
Lives are on the line, in case you aren't paying attention.

This is serious business and requires a dedication as if it were... your only purpose.

Unmotivated 25wpm losers need not apply.

Huh? How can a fast CW op not save a life? Have you read this thread at all?
CW = Gift of Life.
Fast CW = Hand of God.

It's in the Extra Class manual....

people will just go back to swapping radios or something. [Perish the

them tortured in many ways... :-)

Ed doesn't seem to be DOING much. He is powerless to stop Access BPL. ARRL doesn't realize that Access BPL just won't hold up in the marketplace and will die of its own accord.

The FCC was never chartered to be a cheerleader for amateur radio.
FCC merely regulates and mitigates civil radio services in the USA.
Amateur radio hobbyists need to stop their pipe-dreaming about

"greatness" and realize that they've long since been overtaken by many, many other radio services. Some of those radio services (Public Safety of Private Land Mobile Radio Services) are the ones doing the everyday 24/7 role of assisting police, fire, and medical agencies doing the ACTUAL saving of lives.

Some in here think amateur radio is "important." That's because the ARRL has brainwashed them with false beliefs. Amateur radio is a HOBBY, an avocational pursuit, a pleasureable personal free-time activity done for the fun of it.

The sooner ARRL gets its rational side out in front the better it will be for the olde-tyme morsemen to attrit gracefully and with some measure of dignity. Not in the frozen-in-time-to-1930 fantasy radio world they depict in their bragging and boasting.

LOL.. Now that's what I'm looking for! What else ya got? Let's post each reply twice from now on, OK?

In other news....

Stay on topic Dave.... the issue is CW saves lives,[or results in other holistic happenings] ok?

I swear I've already explained that to ya...?

We've proven many posts ago that brain cells have nothing to do with ham radio, this thread or those in it.
My fav site, www.hamsexy.com will explain it all.

More than one in here is confused about "key lists." In commo crypto, the "key lists" are very, very restricted and essential for encryption...not the brag lists of "essential" personnel of an organization. Robeson got called on military crypto by Hans over a long period of Robeson trying to tell off Brakob. Didn't work.

>If he was involved in MARS, it was probably just to eavesdrop on morale

Could be, but then anyone with a reasonably good receiver and a tiny-wire antenna could do that...

MARS is the ONLY commo thing in the military that Robeson MIGHT be aquainted with. He doesn't know snit from shoe-polish on the REAL commo gear.

Frank nailed him. Frank had so many nails he didn't have to ask Robeson to cross his legs...

Heil might be a candidate for the other cross. He claims some sort of intimate knowledge of Human Resources Departments (Personnel) and their terminology. Most strange since Heil got hisself a nice cushy job long enough to get him a government pension...doesn't need to send out resumes to companies looking for warm bodies.

Heil was just trying to divert the subject away from "CW." Heil is a morseman and one of those who insists that a morse code test is absolutely necessary for an AMATEUR radio license. Heil seems to have spent his USAF service time fighting the Vietnam War with a MARS radio. Brave stuff. :-)

Robeson has all those "facts" "in his wallet." He could use some more money in that wallet, get hisself out of a duplex apartment into a real house. No, he'd rather do all those macho activities he claims to be doing and buying surplus flight suits to pose in.

That's why I don't get affected by Robeson's constant personal insults. He LIES about his own life so then he LIES about others' personal lives. Too bad for him.

Do you listen to amateur radio repeaters on your scanner? Yes?

Well talk to Mark. He can tell you how to become a no code Tech. He is an expert at that because he's been a no code tech forever.

Heil has about as much experience with Personnel departments (they are called "Human Resources" now) as he has in getting along with normal people (i.e., those not frozen in time to when code was king).

Heil endured a double-decade in government service so he could get a nice pension. In such a position Heil would have zero-point-zero experience with resumes in trying to get a job interview anywhere in industry.

>> instead of "resume". Many American companies have picked up on the use >> of the term "CV". It is not just used in academia:
>No wonder jobs are going overseas.

Heil is NOT interested in any "CV" definition. All he wants to do is trash-talk his adversaries of the past in here. Heil is a morseman. I am not. I don't revere the Department of State as having any large international radio network (they don't, much of what they have now goes through the DSN). Heil needs to flash all that "government experience" to show how Big and "radio-wise" he is, a "somebody" in a group of amateurs so he can stand tall. :-)

The REAL subject is MORSEMANSHIP. Heil is big on that because he can do it and did it. BFD. What is before the FCC right now is whether the USA will eliminate or keep the morse code test for an amateur radio license. Heil has his license through morsemanship. He could care zero-point-zero about anyone but himself in that, certainly not anyone who might get into amateur radio someday.

MORSEMANSHIP is of NO USE in the bigger world of radio comms of today...except in the minds of olde-tyme AMATEURS in radio who are frozen in times long past.

Sweet Jesus!! Man, are you crazy??? Do you know how many hammies are gonna see that and what kind of search and rescue operation you've started....
Now lives will be lost and thousands of dollars wasted because of that little trick.
I hope you're proud of yourself.

They've posted some of the most disgusting concepts and language here, whereas robesin only posts disgusting concepts and inuendo.

Then he censors "dumbass."

Of course, MARS doesn't use crypto, and neither does the ARS. So how would Major Dumbass know anything about it?

Maybe robesin got "equal time" with those wives? He's so eager to talk to everyone's wife on rrap, maybe he misses that aspect of MARS.

He doesn't know apple butter about MARS either.

I'm just thinking this would be a great place for a radio swap group, that's all.
Everything I say is usually in sarcasm.....just to add stupidity to the stupidty....
I've given up though and I'm going back to ebay...

Sprint has nothing to do with groups or their charters. This is more bullhockey from the net neutrality paranoia idiots.

Good on ya then! Do upgrade whenever you can, coz hammin' can be fun if you can find a decent bunch to hang with.
Learning 5wpm is pretty easy and gives you a new "toy" or "language" to play with if you are so inclined.
The big plus being the new privileges and theory, and all the hi-tech progression in radio going on in the 21st Century!
There's lots to get into.
Gud luck,

Stupidity Takes Its Toll. Please Have Exact Change.
Please remember to vote Outer Filth John Harrington, "James C. Cracked", and "Ward Hardmanure"/"Pete"/<wfh_jr> for KotM, CotM, CNotM, and the Special Ops Cody Memorial Award!
Thread where outing begins: http://tinyurl.com/hojf8
Also vote Ward Hardmanure for Order of the Holey Sockpuppet!
For the August ballot coming Sept. 1st to a newsgroup near you George Pickett Memorial Award nominee <wfh_jr@hotmail.com> on outing personal contact info in x-poasted subject lines:
Plenty of people post under their real names and do not attempt to hide their contact info. You are scared of being 'outed' because you are a pathological abuser of usenet, and people rightly despise you for it.
You're afraid of being reported to the authorities or, better, visited by a couple of guys with baseball bats. Other people don't have this obsessive fear. Ward Hardman himself has posted plenty of personal information - nothing that anyone else added was hidden in any way.
You're so fucking scared you've built up this whole sick mythology about different categories of bad dudes who 'out' scum like you.

Meanwhile you are the ugliest pigfucker in the universe. You are the coward without ethics. You call me a 'newbie' - ha! what an asshole you are. Those who want to remain anonymous do so. There is absolutely no way you could identify me, not unless you had the sort of subpoena power that only gets turned on for big-time terrorists. That's because I chose to be anonymous. Some people don't. Only really stupid dicks like you choose the sort of semi-anonymity which leaves you in constant fear.

What a dickless wonder you are 'Snarky' you fat asshole.

It sucked.

Just got a message on the somalia reflector today. Seems the al qaida is well liked in somalia because the country has been through 15 years of chaos and lawlessness, and the islamists are now imposing their law.
I guess any law is better than none.

Reminds me, in part, how hitler came to power.

First they have to take away our cancelbots. They can have mine when they pry my cold dead fingers off it.

Plenty of people post under their real names and do not attempt to hide
their contact info. You are scared of being 'outed' because you are a pathological abuser of usenet, and people rightly despise you for it.
You're afraid of being reported to the authorities or, better, visited by a couple of guys with baseball bats. Other people don't have this obsessive fear. Ward Hardman himself has posted plenty of personal information - nothing that anyone else added was hidden in any way.
You're so fucking scared you've built up this whole sick mythology about different categories of bad dudes who 'out' scum like you.

Meanwhile you are the ugliest pigfucker in the universe. You are the coward without ethics. You call me a 'newbie' - ha! what an asshole you are. Those who want to remain anonymous do so. There is absolutely no way you could identify me, not unless you had the sort of subpoena power that only gets turned on for big-time terrorists. That's because I chose to be anonymous. Some people don't. Only really stupid dicks like you choose the sort of semi-anonymity which leaves you in constant fear.

What a dickless wonder you are 'Snarky' you fat asshole.

I see the rabid "morse code tests for ALL" morsemen as just

Morse testing in this new millennium is about as "necessary" as having a buggy whip in an SUV to coax it out of a pothole.

But, the BM (Big Morsemen) think it can "save lives" (a la the Titanic disaster of 94 years ago) so AMATEURS are "supposed" to test for it to get an AMATEUR radio license. Nonsensical.

Who wants to pilfer 300 postings about nothing to find a sale ad?
On the Somalia thing,
Do you mean extremists/terrorists that claim to follow Islam, or just basic Islamists?
It looks like you mean the former.

Please understand that Al Qaeda is a group of terrorists/extremists, it doesn't matter what religion they claim to follow.

No you are wrong about that, Mark, I made a pass at Roger Wiseman and he's kicked my ass up and down the internet for years now.
And you leave him alone! He's mine, not yours, stalker! K?

It's the lying that bothers most of us, I bought a radio from him and it smoked when I plugged it in, upon examination, I found it was NO WHERE NEAR what he described, he used photos that didn't show the imperfections and outright lied about the ownership. I know several people who have sold gear to him (using his gottahaveit1995 name) only to see radio-mart sell it a week later, claiming it came from his personal collection and had owned it for years!! Then he lies about the condition of it, not to mention that he shill bids on his gear using the above mentioned gottahaveit1995 name. This asshole needs to be run off ebay, because of how he screws unsuspecting bidders!!

It's the same one as in the bylines of my Ham Radio magazine articles...and in dozens of Comments on NPRMs at the FCC.
All visible to anyone with Internet access or who can get to the FCC Reading Room in DC.

All you have to do (if you've got about 8 hours to spare) is go through Google archives since before they bought it from DejaNews several years ago. "Robitussin" has thousands of postings in the same venal manner he continues to use... especially his self-promotion as heroic USMC veteran which he has never, ever proved through any third-party references, digitized documents, or much of anything else other than his own AOL home page and self-description on QRZ.

He is clearly into his own fantasy of imagined superpowers without the aid of Stan Lee.

"Sidetracked?!?" :-)

I put this message into the Captain ARRL Superpower Decryption machine and the machine broke down.

Last I looked (which was yesterday) there were NO Public Safety radio services which used "CW" for either "life-saving" or distress calls. The USCG doesn't monitor the OLD 500 KHz international maritime distress and safety frequency any more. International Civil Aviation Organization long ago stopped any need for carrying
"CW"-proficient air crew on over-ocean flights.

This "vital need" of maintaining a "pool of trained (morsemen) operators" in the mighty amateur radio (militia?) ranks is a wigment of olde-tyme morsemen's imagination.

In truth, I haven't checked out the Civil Air Patrol. Maybe they have some kind of "need" for morsemen even though they use 121.5 MHz for emergencies just like all the CIVIL airways do.
[transponder squawk to 77 or 7700 if that is installed; 243 MHz
if a REAL military aircraft]

We'll have to see what the "pilot in command" of a TN CAP two-seater has to say on that...if he isn't "busy" with his "life-saving air patrols." :-)

Well, let me ask, from the point of view of a potential noob to the hobby. What use is the code requirements?
I can't really see in today's era, the need for them? I've been surfing around looking at ham and talking to an old friend that had a license and it look interesting to me.

But, given that many professional people like myself are stretched for time, what good does all the licensing and code requirements do for you besides build up boundries to doing something new and fun?

I'm in a pretty technical field, and I study to keep up in that field everyday, the last thing I want to do, is have to spend my weekends studying to talk on a radio. If less stringent requirements were there, I could easily afford the tools of the trade, and would like to just jump in and start working with a ham setup. I'm particularly interested in exploring the amateur radio/computer connections.

I have no problem informally looking up information and learning on my own (heck, that's what I'm doing in the USENET group to begin with)...but, I just don't have the time for archaic rules, regulations and codes that as far as I can see...really serve no real purpose but, to keep out busy people that might like to participate.

Can you give me valid reasons as to what useful purpose in today's age they serve?

Thank you,

The 'use' is something you just can't understand. The 'use' is a commitment of time and talent which adds value to the license. The 'use' is investment.

In other words, you just can't come up with a valid reason other than some emotional-traditional one, can you?

What is the return on that "investment?" Being good enough to do 1930s radio operating? In a diversified HOBBY?

What you really seem to be saying is that "everyone has to do it because you did it...so there, nyah, nyah..." :-)

> Balance of original post has been REDACTED.

You have been redacted.

You have been rejected.

You have been inducted.

Here's a news flash: The job of the FCC (the agency that grants amateur radio licenses...and hundreds of others...) is to regulate and mitigate all USA civil radio. It does not tailor ham tests to some nebulous "tradition" of the Archaic Radiotelegraphy Society (ARS). I.E., it has no reason to demand anyone take a manual morse code test except under the lobbying by the ARRL.

If you want to "preserve" the ARS as requiring morsemanship for all privileges below 30 MHz, then you need to make up a Petition and submit it to the FCC. You can even ask them to RENAME
the ARS to Archaic Radiotelegraphy Society. The FCC allows such petitioning. They even explain how to do it on their website.

Tell the FCC that you insist on maintaining 1930s standards of radio communication well beyond 2030 by keeping that morse code test forever and ever. The ARRL will love you for it. Go for it!

Motivating hams to be better hams is a good thing.

For example, if you were going to lose your internet if you didn't learn how to type and spell after a year, I'm sure you'd be learning how to type and spell. But since there is no requirement that you have to type and spell properly after a year, you continue on murdering the english language.

There's some real gems in there.

Lawsuits. Robeson sues people, or at least he says he does. In his last lawsuit, he got an Upper Peninsula attorney gratis, then made comments on who his free attorney's wife might be sleeping with. Meanwhile, the person he is suing has yet to be served.

"Bricks through windows, slashed tires, terrorized wives." These are bad things that happen to people who shoot their mouths off, as some people have been told they do. Mind you, Robesin isn't the one throwing bricks, slashing tires, or terrorizing wives. "Other people" do this sort of stuff.

"Dialing..." On Robesin's personal authority as a male nurse and failed Marine, he can make a phone call anywhere in the USA and have you picked up on his say so. Really.

"PUTZ, Putz, putz" Disagree with Robesin and you are a penis with a yiddish accent.

"PEDOPHILE, Pedophile, pedophile" If you disagree with Robesin and you give of your time to a youth group, you are a pervert.

"HOMO, Homo, homo" Disagree with Robesin and you are queer, with lots and lots of inuendo.

Robesin is a national hero, taking part in seven hostile actions as a Marine. Yet, his only overseas assignment is Okinawa. Never been injured, but discharged after only 18 years. Says he's retired. Says he's disabled. Says it's not medical. Says he has been rehabilitated by the VA. "Ask the VA."

Robesin got back into uniform as a Tennessee State Guard "officer" of some kind. Very short lived career.

Robesin got back into uniform as a Civil Air Patrol (CAP) "officer" of some kind. Says he's a Major now. Photo of him in a sage green (not blue) flight suit on his QRZ website. As far as I know, most CAP volunteers are involved in training youth/Cadets. Hmmmm?

Robesin got a vanity call, K4CAP, while in the CAP. The CAP HQ is at Maxwell AFB in Montgomery, Alabama. Then he gave it up. Look where his old call now resides.

Robesin got back into uniform as a male nurse. Says he doesn't wear the white dress uniform. Probably just regular pants and a v-neck lavendar colo[u]red top.

Robesin has military medals. He has lots of medals. Many of those medals he didn't earn.

Robesin used to be an ASSISTANT NCOIC of NMC MARS on Okinawa. Doesn't know the first thing about it. Doesn't know what a MOD is.

"MARS >>>IS<<< Amateur Radio" according to Robesin Yup, you heard it here first.

A well know amateur radio outlet had the owners daughter's photo featured in a prominent amateur radio publication. Robesin said she was selling "Something" but it wasn't radios. He's a swell guy.

Robesin can make comments all day long about how your children won't respect you. His child died from severe birth defects and he knows that no one will make comments about his children. He's a swell guy.

Robesin needs to talk to the wives. He needs to talk to Len's wife. He needs to talk to my wife. He needs to talk to Mark's wife. He wants to talk to them on the phone or in person. He wants to mail them. He wants to knock on my door to talk to my wife and posts partial addresses so you know to expect a visit. Now he makes jokes about Len and Mark's wife. He's a swell guy.

I could go on, but I don't have 8 hours as Len suggests...

So what's the real beef??? I disagreed with Robesin. He doesn't like the way I think.

So what's the real, Real beef? I don't think the Morse Code exam should be retained for an HF license in amateur radio.

I'll say it again ... INVESTMENT!!

If an activity is to have value it must have INVESTMENT.

Whether it be Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, Little League coach, Soccer MOM, fishing, poker playing, or just watching tv. All require INVESTMENT if it is to have value.

If you don't/can't make the INVESTMENT, find something else to become involved with.

It has nothing to do with hazing.

If I am in a store, such as Safeway, I find a lone isle, then let it rip - sometimes, someone will walk into the isle, as I am exiting, and I know they get a good whiff, then I laugh.

If you will read Part 97 (the rules that govern amateur radio), the government doesn't care about you doing something new and fun. The section on basis and purpose makes it quite clear that their objectives are quite different. They want people knowledgeable in ham radio and who are interested in expanding that knowledge.

Until and unless you have actually participated in amateur radio in a wide variety of aspects, it is difficult to asses which rules, regulations, knowledge, etc are archaic and which should remain as requirements. Notice that the majority of people advocating ditching requirements are those who have not yet passed those requirements, regardless of their age. Note that the majority of people advocating keeping the requirements have passed them and have experience in amateur radio again regardless of their age.

As far as "busy people" go, again refer to the basis and purpose as given in the rules. The government is not concerned about your choice of how you use your time. It has no bearing on what their goals are.

> Can you give me valid reasons as to what useful purpose in today's age > they serve?

Every piece of knowledge has its uses. The difficult part is winnowing through it and decide what should be tested and what should not.

Here's why I think code should still be tested:
1. It is still one of the basic building blocks of ham radio. For example, one of the "hot" digital modes is PSK31. The developer drew upon personal experience and incorporated features derived from that mode to make a robust digital mode.
2. Because it is not "book learning", too many people will avoid it since it is different than the type of learning they are accustomed to. They will falsely think it is hard when in reality it is different. Requiring them to learn it gets them over that resistance hump.
3. Each and every mode has its strong points and weak points. Each of us that participate in ham radio should attempt to gain personal experience in those modes so that we know by that personal experience what those strengths and weaknesses are.

If you are interested, I could construct various scenarios where mode X is the best mode. However, unless you specifically want to know, I won't clutter up the newsgroup at this time with discussions that have been repeated many times by many people already.

LenAnderson, You have obviously made an INVESTMENT in your technical profession.
Make one in your participation in the radio service!!

Amateur Radio is a SERVICE!!! If you only think of it as a hobby your thinking is flawed.

Here's another:

""SOMALIA, THE BLACK HOLE OF ANARCHY

BY AHMED Q. BURSALIID

In mid July 2005 The U.S. intelligence agents, working with local warlords, have carried out counter terrorist operations to seize suspects. "Somalia remains the theatre for a shadowy confrontation involving local Jihadis, foreign Al Qaeda operatives and intelligence services from a number of regional and Western countries," says a report by the International Crisis Group in 2005. The report says the "dirty war between terrorists and counter-terrorist operatives in Mogadishu appears to have entered a new and more vicious stage that threatens to push the country further towards Jihadism and extremist violence unless its root causes are properly addressed."

The Somali transitional federal government was formed in neighbouring Kenya in 2004 and moved into Somalia June 2005. However, the administration has failed to relocate to Mogadishu, the Somali capital, because the city was considered unsafe. Due to the insecurity of Mogadishu, the TFG relocated to Jawhar, which it later decided to move to Baidoa.

Warlords and leaders of Islamic courts have been fighting in Mogadishu for about five months. This led to the loss of hundreds of civilians and destruction of properties. Somalia, which had been in a state of anarchy for more than a decade, has once again gone to war; this war was somehow different from previous ones. The nature of this war is seen to have some religious and political clash while previous ones were much related to tribal and feudal conflicts. Each one of the conflicting parties is claiming that the other group is related to Al-Qaeda when the reality is somehow different from that. After months of armed conflicts within the capital city of Somalia, Union of Islamic Courts took the lead with enormous points by eliminating the warlords who took hostage the country and its people for 16 years.

United States of America, which earlier denied any allegation of helping or giving hand to the warlords in the fight to weed out the Islamic Militia in Somalia shortly after the takeover admitted that it had been supporting warlords to destabilise the Islamic militia. America has been an active player in the politics of Somalia, and until now its policy towards restoring peace and stability in the war -torn Somalia is somehow obscure.

Somalis believe that it is the right time to take advantage to restore the lost hope of good governance in the country as Union of Islamic Courts led by Sheikh Sharif imposed law and order on Mogadishu, which was seen neither for 16 years. Hundreds of families from overseas countries returned back to Mogadishu, the capital city of Somalia since the takeover took place.

At first Transitional Federal Government welcomed the political change, which took place in Mogadishu as the Union of Islamic Courts disarmed a pack of US-backed warlords that took the country and its people hostage for more than a decade. But soon after the Islamic Militia started to capture some other cities, the TFG warned the Union of Islamic Courts of capturing farther cities. A big gap of political misunderstanding came in between the Transitional Federal Government and the Union of Islamic Courts, after the president of fragile Transitional Federal Government requested peacekeeping forces from the African Union. As the new Somali constitution inked in Kenya says, "Peacekeeping forces should not come from the neighbouring countries (Ethiopia, Kenya and Djibouti)". Likewise, the parliament passed a motion, which it was requesting peacekeeping troops to Somalia without paying attention to the classification of peacekeeping forces from AU countries and of front line countries. This has created an escalation of political crisis in Somalia. Ethiopia, which is the common enemy of Somalia has sent its troops to Somalia in an attempt to protect the Transitional Federal Government.

This time, Arab League took the political platform of Somalia to mediate
the two conflicting parties. TFG and UIC were invited to attend a mediation conference held on June 2006 in Sudan to settle their differences. After a reconciliation conference, presided over by Sudanese president Omar Hassan Albashir, the current chairman of Arab League, the reconciliation process derailed with unknown reasons but it is believed that Ethiopia was the main figure, which made the reconciliation process fail as the outcome of the meeting could not meet the criteria of Ethiopia's plan to Somalia and then, President Abdullahi Yusuf Ahmed, a well-known pro-Ethiopian warlord and his loyal prime minister Ali Mohamed Gedi, a vet scientist started to advocate the legality of Ethiopian Army presence in Somalia.

The Somalis are of the opinion that the involvement of Ethiopian Army in the peacekeeping operations in Somalia could cause havoc and deterioration of the political condition of the country in any case as Ethiopia is an old aged enemy of Somalia in East Africa. While a vast majority of the Somali public strongly opposed to deployment of Ethiopian troop into Somalia under any pretext, president Yusuf's political stance towards the deployment of Ethiopian troops in Somalia is clear and also in action by denying the presence of Ethiopian troops in Somalia just to protect his presidential seat.

Since the reconciliation conference in Sudan derailed a number of ministers resigned due to the political misunderstanding between TFG and
UIC. Prime minister declared that he would be nominating successors of the resigned 24 ministers. In addition to that, the prime minister himself survived after the Somali parliament passed a motion of no confidence against him recently.

Moreover, Prime minister of Ethiopia Milez zanawi whose government earlier denied any presence of Ethiopian troops in Somalia told BBC

that
his government has sent troops to Somalia to protect the Transitional Federal Government from the Union of Islamic Courts. While on the other hand, Eritrea is also believed to be an active supporter for the Union of Islamic Courts. Somalis believe that the support from both Ethiopia and Eritrea respectively is much related to a proxy war in between them.
US government warned Ethiopia and Eritrea stop the proxy war they are playing in the Somali territory.

As long a 'Rare DX' uses CW, CW will live and thrive in the DX community.

A DX pile of 100 stations on CW occupies much less bandwidth than 1 SSB station.
The CW contact rate exceeds the SSB rate.

As long a 'Rare DX' uses CW, CW will live and thrive in the DX community.

It's your choice: if you want to play the DX game learn the rules including 25 wpm CW.

If you want to operate an appliance, but an appliance.

If I knew we were in the same store of any type I'd look for you. Then
I would pull down my pants, (i don't use underware), and sit on your face. I make sure that long nose of your was inserted into my rectum.
Then I fart on you, then drop a hot steamy turd on your face, then get up and piss on you. Finally I'd use your own shirt to wipe my ass.

change the license structure.

forget cw

forget the q/a written

have a fill in the blank test where the questions strictly made sure one knew enough not to hurt themselves or others. not technical,just safety.

fcc agents travel to clubs at various times to conduct exams.

The newly issued license would be issued as an "amateur radio license"..... all current license holders would be issued a new "amateur radio license" along with their current call sign.
All license holders would enjoy all frequencies assigned to the amateur service. No more FCC ordered subbands. we can do that ourselves.

Thats my idea to save ham radio,

I'm not the one that brought AUK to this NG. Markie-tards entourage brought them here, I just agree with AUK methodology towards the kOOks.

I have a sense of humor that would not be understood by normal Usenet users.
Breakdown???? Hardly, I have real life drama in the real world.
I'm glad I surprised you, maybe you have some kookologist in you that can be brought out and used for the common good. If not, expect the worst of me and those of AUK and AFA-B
A breakdown over Markie-tard's lame repeat attempts at insults????
MR.Serious???? Since when? I like to stay on topic, but I'm not opposed to trolling the kOOks of rec.radio.ect. I am a kOOkologist in training. Ask anyone in AUK or AFA-B.

The reason no new hams are coming in is prospective hams stop here and see you three and then leave thinking ham radio is full of retards.

The problem with your supposition is that, to the best of my knowledge, Lloyd Davies does NOT post here. If he does, please provide evidence of same. (posters assuming Lloyd's name ain't "proof") Second problem is that despite Wiseman's attempts to disrupt a few newsgroups, Mark Morgan has done far, far more to cause disruption than Wiseman has.
Wiseman, or his third person persona, makes his usual spate of filthy comments and leaves for a while. Not so Mark Morgan. Mark, despite his claims of being employed, seems to have hour upon free hour to flood the groups with his drivel and he cares little of what a thread is about or who initiated it. Mark feels he must have SOMETHING to say to just about each and every post made, and 98% of his responses have absolutely no value...if one can even decipher them.
Mark must be far more lonely than Wiseman.

Yes, I did. Prove that Davies posts here. Show me ONE example...with headers, please. Show me.
Of course the line, "That was Davies, dumbass! ", was made by your nemesis, your best buddy Wiseman. There are literally dozens of Wiseman posts made over the call of Davies, but again...show me proof that Lloyd Davies posts here.

I am off work tomorrow, Wednesday the 30th. I will then respond to all posts that require my attention (if you are lucky), as working 2 jobs and having to deal with REAL life situations, my time is limited. To the trolls of any radio group, FUCK OFF! To the kOOkologists of AUK and AFA-B, I truly apologize for my absence and lack of participation during these busy times, but hey, I gotta make the Benjamin's.

>LenAnderson, You have obviously made an INVESTMENT in your
>technical profession.

Yes, I have. Not only has it been intellectually rewarding,
it was also monetarily rewarding...for the last 54 years.

>Make one in your participation in the radio service!!

Kiss my yes, "Dave," I've "participated" in numerous radio SERVICES of USA civil radio and in DoD contract work from below LF to Ku-Band. In these previous 54 years I've communicated from land, from the air, from the ocean surface...even once "worked" a station ON the moon. Never once in 53 years was I EVER required to either use or know
on-off-keying manual radiotelegraphy.

>Amateur Radio is a SERVICE!!! If you only think of it as a hobby your thinking
>is flawed.

"Dave," you are SO FLAWED that you can't think straight.
Here's the real story:

Go to the FULL Title 47, C.F.R., and LOOK at ALL the radio
SERVICES. The word "service" used in Title 47 is a regulatory term denoting a type and kind of radio activity being regulated under a Part. Go write the FCC if you don't believe that. But, you won't believe that since you are obviously stuck in some kind of "patriotic" pipe-dream
where you think a HOBBY activity is some kind of "national service."

Look in Part 95, the Personal Radio SERVICES. In there you will find the Citizens Band Radio SERVICE and the Radio-
Control Radio SERVICE. Those are all SERVICES, "Dave."

There is NOTHING wrong with having a HOBBY. It's a fine hobby in fact. What is wrong, seriously wrong, with your (observable) thinking is that US amateur radio is some kind of quasi-military "national need" that is somehow
"important to the national welfare." It isn't. Amateur radio is about as "vital to the nation" as CB or some model airplane flyers on one of the 72 MHz channels.

Yes, HAMS get neat certificates from the federal government (suitable for framing) and like to go around saying "they are 'authorized' by the feds" as if that were some Nobel-laureate accomplishment. It isn't. The FCC is tasked with regulating and mitigating ALL United States civil radio. Since amateur radio transmitters emit RF that requires the FCC to regulate it. The FCC, or rather its predecessors (before 1934), decided that licensing was a way of doing that regulation. To get that license required taking a test. That TEST was never, ever any sort of academic achievement thing (FCC was never chartered to be an academic institution), just something to satisfy the FCC that a license applicant was sufficiently knowledgeable to get that license. Note: Satisfed the FCC...not the ARRL, NOT the nebulous "ham community" or even any "Hams in da Hood."

Have you got that straight yet, "Dave?" Did you take some kind of oath of "service" on getting your amateur license? Raise the right hand and repeat after whoever was prompting you on the oath? No? I didn't think so.

I took a REAL oath on 13 March 1952, "Dave," entering the United States Army. A Real SERVICE, "Dave." I did my "eight" and got an Honorable Discharge. From February 1953 to end of January 1956 I worked HF comms in Big Time radio. You can even download a photo essay of that from this link:

http://sujan.hallikainen.org/BroadcastHistory/uploads/My3Years.pdf

It's 6 MB and will take about 19 minutes download over a POTS dial-up connection. If you look closely at those 20 pages you won't find a single thing about "working CW" (on-off-keying manual telegraphy) yet the whole station ran 24/7 pushing about 220K messages a month. It would be IMPOSSIBLE to send that many (some of which were encrypted) by manual telegraphy unless the signal battalion was doubled. It didn't have to be because the messages got through and on-time. That was 53 to 51 years ago, "Dave."

What do you think the military uses NOW for communications? Data, "Dave," Data. High-speed data, "Dave," not some dinky 1200 baud amateur stuff. DIGITAL. Digital can be on-line encrypted and on-line decrypted securely.

You show me where the REAL Services use manual radiotelegraphy, "Dave." They don't. It is voice and/or data, most of it in the field done DIGITALLY.

WTF, "Dave?" So, you tacked on a bunch of undescribed acronym things supposedly project numbers or IDs. Are we to be "impressed?" I'm not. I've worked alongside and for PhDs who didn't bother with IMAGE and all that rank-status-title BS...

WE got the job done, working together.

Amateur radio MIGHT get something done working together. But,
you olde-tymers won't. You have to RULE, holding fast to the traditions of 50 to 70 years ago...because YOU and all the olde-tymers had to do it so everyone else has to...and all you olde-tymer morsemen think that "CW" is somehow "best."
It isn't "best." If you really have a BSEE instead of just PR BS about morsemanship, you would realize that.

><http://www.strategic-air-command.com/missiles/Peacekeeper/Peacekeeper...>

"Dave," amateur radio isn't about missles. Save your energy
for donating DVDs of "Strategic Air Command" (starring Jimmy Stewart) to give to impressionable youngsters.

I've been in the smoke-and-fire trade of rocket engines for a little while (Rocketdyne Division of Rockwell International).
Trust me, rocket engines do NOT use manual radiotelegraphy.
BTW, SAC is GONE, "Dave." A whole reorganization in the USAF
some time ago. No more "oil burner routes" or flying out to loiter near the USSR (the USSR is gone, too). BTW, there were SSB transmitters emitting 12 KHz wide RF long before SAC got the single-channel SSB stuff to use on such loitering. I know, having to keep a few of those REAL SSB
transmitters running correctly.

Now, "Dave," I can't fault on-off-keying CW any. The key fob for our 2005 Malibu MAXX uses that. Yes, the last vestige of high-speed CW (REAL CW) done digitally. Done
by the hundreds of thousands all over the country daily.
Nearly all of them operated by unlicensed NON-MORSE-TESTED civilians! That Chebbie got in our garage courtesy of "investments," "Dave." Investments in REAL work, not playing like big-time 1930s radio ops "jobs" of a long-
past age by AMATEURS.

Dee, the "rules that govern amateur radio" are the ENTIRETY of Title 47 C.F.R. I don't care that the ARRL pushes ONLY Part 97. Part 1 has plenty about amateur radio as well as a few other Parts. Look it up. It's free at the US Government Printing Office website.

>The section
>on basis and purpose makes it quite clear that their objectives are quite >different.

The "objectives" of the FCC are to regulate and mitigate ALL civil radio in the USA, Dee. That's what the Communications Act of 1934 and the Telecommunications Act of 1996 chartered them to do (plus quite a bit on wireline comms...which don't apply to amateur radio).

The "Basis and Purpose" has a lot of POLITICAL boilerplate
in it, just like most of the other Parts for other radio SERVICES. Get real.

> They want people knowledgeable in ham radio and who are >interested in expanding that knowledge.

The FCC is mainly interested in all radio services' users
FOLLOWING THE REGULATIONS, Dee. That's their job. The FCC doesn't "want" people a certain way, only to FOLLOW
THE REGULATIONS.

"George," you've got a whole bunch in this forum who think that amateur radio is some kind of veddy formal "JOB" with absolutes on THE WAY THEY DO IT. It's almost draconian in the insistence of "correct proceedure." No one will get fired from that "job" if they don't use "correct" ways but
the way they blabber on you'd think they were "supervisors."

Horsepuckey. Dee, "George" is talking about GETTING INTO amateur radio. Don't give us this olde-tymer morseperson
"I've operated all the modes there are" stuff. Dee, I've operated lots more modes on radio than YOU are allowed to
as an amateur.

Manual morse code ability IS an ARCHAIC mode of communications
Dee. ALL the other US radio services have either dropped it for comms or never bothered with it in the first place. ALL.
The ARRL and the olde-tyme morsepersons insist that the manual
morse test "MUST" remain to "show something" about commitment and dedication. To WHOM, Dee? To YOU? To da Hams in da hood?

>Notice
>that the majority of people advocating ditching requirements are those who >have not yet passed those requirements, regardless of their age.

Dee, before you get to the downright-bitchy stage, may I remind
you that some of us professionals in radio and electronics
NEVER BOTHERED WITH AN AMATEUR RADIO TEST? I got my First 'Phone
in 1956. Considerably more testing involved than a ham license test then. Could YOU get a GROL now? Could YOU get a job working with radio hardware?

>Note that >the majority of people advocating keeping the requirements have passed them >and have experience in amateur radio again regardless of their age.

Yes, nine-year-old Extras possess the maturity and wisdom of the ages, all through having taken that morse test and gotten
that magic certificate (suitable for framing).

>As far as "busy people" go, again refer to the basis and purpose as given in >the rules. The government is not concerned about your choice of how you use >your time. It has no bearing on what their goals are.

Dee, you are LECTURING again. [just how long have you been
in ANY radio?]

Dee, go look at some 1990 documents on the creation of the no-code-test Technician license. There's a copy available for free download on the NCI website. Over 16 years ago the FCC said outright that it didn't think the manual morse code test suited their purpose in granting an amateur radio license.
The FCC said the same thing in last year's NPRM.

I DO have to remind you that the FCC's only job is to REGULATE all civil radio in the USA. Their only task is to do that and mitigate matters of interference with other radio services (plus wireline but that's not concerning amateurs). Theirs is not to brainwash hams...that's the ARRL's task.

>> Can you give me valid reasons as to what useful purpose in today's age
>> they serve?

[stand by for the LITANY from the Church of St. Hiram]

>Every piece of knowledge has its uses. The difficult part is winnowing >through it and decide what should be tested and what should not.

Ahem, to olde-tyme morsepersons, manual morse code skill MUST be tested for any radio privileges below 30 MHz. That's engraved in everlasting marble and protected by nuclear-blast
armor plate.

>Here's why I think code should still be tested:
>1. It is still one of the basic building blocks of ham radio.

Horsepucky. It was only the first mode used...had to be in the primitive-technology of early radio using "spark."
Spark is outlawed now, Dee.

> For example,
>one of the "hot" digital modes is PSK31. The developer drew upon personal >experience and incorporated features derived from that mode to make a robust >digital mode.

More sinning-by-omission, Dee. Peter Martinez, G3PLX, innovated PSK31. Using the available Information Theory rules he knew about, derived from commercial and military technology. It was field-tested for years in Europe by many amateurs there before it got any publicity over here. "Hot" is over a decade OLD, Dee. In 1974 Peter was doing great things with polyphase networks for voice SSB...it was written up in RSGB's membership magazine. I doubt the ARRL bothered with publicizing it.

>2. Because it is not "book learning", too many people will avoid it since >it is different than the type of learning they are accustomed to. They will >falsely think it is hard when in reality it is different. Requiring them to

So...morsemanship really IS a barrier. You admit it.

>3. Each and every mode has its strong points and weak points. Each of us >that participate in ham radio should attempt to gain personal experience in >those modes so that we know by that personal experience what those strengths >and weaknesses are.

Oh my, there we go on the lecture circuit again.

Dee, I started out working as an Illustrator. That's an artist who draws/paints things as they really are. I have an aptitude for that. It is as natural to me to draw, fairly well I might add, as a physically-endowed athlete is to sports or another with a musical aptitude is to playing an instrument. The ability to "advance" in manual morse code skill is NOT a "natural" one but an aptitude in only a few of us. The US military even tested for that aptitude in all recruits of the 1940s and 1950s. [I got okay marks in that, by the way...:-)]

The first radio operators used manual morse code. First, it was fine for the primitive state of the art. Second, it was a mature mode in the wireline communications, a technology even more primitive than radio of that time. Telegraphers weren't taken off the street...they either had the aptitude or they didn't.
Once "radio" got going, the telegraphers (downsized from wireline comms by those new-fangled teleprinter thingies) made much of their "abilities" using on-off-keying manual morse. The Morse Mythos was born and grew like wildfire. Good, good newsprint copy!

But, as time progressed there came NEW modes, much faster and more accurate, without need of morse specialists at each end of a circuit. The radio telegraphers were downsized. They retired and turned to amateur radio of pre-WW2 times. Morse was still king of the modes and ARRL (by the 1930s) was hailing the king as the "best" for all amateurs. None of this newfangled thing called "voice" for them although they did pay lip-service to it. By 1940 the ARRL was King of the membership organizations (through their publications) and they maintained that morsemanship was the epitome of amateur comms. They kept that up after WW2 and on into the single-channel SSB start in the 1950s...again paying lip-service to this newfangled SSB. And you know what? ARRL is STILL trying to promote morsemanship even if sinning-by omission once more.

Back before WRC-03 (that's over three years ago) the IARU took a position that the amateur radio license tests for morse ability was NOT mandatory...make it an option for each administration. Lots of folks went along with that, but NOT the ARRL. League was almost vehement in opposition. OK, the ITU-R amateur radio regulations were CHANGED, going along the lines of the IARU position. [that's the International Amateur Radio Union, Dee] Ah, but NOW the ARRL takes a neutral position, won't go either way...they just say that all amateurs must obey the law...but they lobbied last year to keep SOME manual morse testing for the under-30-MHz privileges. 92 years after being formed, the ARRL just can't give up and change to what OTHER folks want...

>If you are interested, I could construct various scenarios where mode X is

Please, go on, Dee. I want to hear from your vast experience in radio and all your guru-like knowledge of what is "best" for radio amateurs. Especially WHY everyone has to emulate the olde-tyme amateur days, the ones before you were born.

>technical profession.

Yes, I have. Not only has it been intellectually rewarding,
it was also monetarily rewarding...for the last 54 years.

>Make one in your participation in the radio service!!

Kiss my yes, "Dave," I've "participated" in numerous radio
SERVICES of USA civil radio and in DoD contract work from below LF to Ku-Band. In these previous 54 years I've communicated from land, from the air, from the ocean
surface...even once "worked" a station ON the moon. Never once in 53 years was I EVER required to either use or know
on-off-keying manual radiotelegraphy.

>Amateur Radio is a SERVICE!!! If you only think of it as a hobby your thinking
>is flawed.

"Dave," you are SO FLAWED that you can't think straight.
Here's the real story:

Go to the FULL Title 47, C.F.R., and LOOK at ALL the radio
SERVICES. The word "service" used in Title 47 is a regulatory term denoting a type and kind of radio activity
being regulated under a Part. Go write the FCC if you don't believe that. But, you won't believe that since you are obviously stuck in some kind of "patriotic" pipe-dream
where you think a HOBBY activity is some kind of "national service."

Look in Part 95, the Personal Radio SERVICES. In there you will find the Citizens Band Radio SERVICE and the Radio-
Control Radio SERVICE. Those are all SERVICES, "Dave."

There is NOTHING wrong with having a HOBBY. It's a fine
hobby in fact. What is wrong, seriously wrong, with your (observable) thinking is that US amateur radio is some kind of quasi-military "national need" that is somehow
"important to the national welfare." It isn't. Amateur

Yes, HAMS get neat certificates from the federal government (suitable for framing) and like to go around saying "they are 'authorized' by the feds" as if that were some Nobel-laureate accomplishment. It isn't. The FCC is tasked with regulating and mitigating ALL United States civil radio. Since amateur radio transmitters emit RF that requires the FCC to regulate it. The FCC, or rather its predecessors (before 1934), decided that licensing was a way of doing that regulation. To get that license required taking a test. That TEST was never, ever any sort of academic achievement thing (FCC was never chartered to be an academic institution), just something to satisfy the FCC that a license applicant was sufficiently knowledgeable to get that license. Note: Satisfed the FCC...not the ARRL, NOT the nebulous "ham community" or even any "Hams in da Hood."

Have you got that straight yet, "Dave?" Did you take some kind of oath of "service" on getting your amateur license? Raise the right hand and repeat after whoever was prompting you on the oath? No? I didn't think so.

I took a REAL oath on 13 March 1952, "Dave," entering the United States Army. A Real SERVICE, "Dave." I did my "eight" and got an Honorable Discharge. From February 1953 to end of January 1956 I worked HF comms in Big Time radio. You can even download a photo essay of that from this link:

http://sujan.hallikainen.org/BroadcastHistory/uploads/My3Years.pdf

It's 6 MB and will take about 19 minutes download over a POTS dial-up connection. If you look closely at those 20 pages you won't find a single thing about "working CW" (on-off-keying manual telegraphy) yet the whole station ran 24/7 pushing about 220K messages a month. It would be IMPOSSIBLE to send that many (some of which were encrypted) by manual telegraphy unless the signal battalion was doubled. It didn't have to be because the messages got through and on-time. That was 53 to 51 years ago, "Dave."

What do you think the military uses NOW for communications? Data, "Dave," Data. High-speed data, "Dave," not some dinky 1200 baud amateur stuff. DIGITAL. Digital can be on-line encrypted and on-line decrypted securely.

You show me where the REAL Services use manual radiotelegraphy, "Dave." They don't. It is voice and/or data, most of it in the field done DIGITALLY.

>/s/ Dave, BSEE, Program Chief Engineer-retired, LGM-118A(RS), MK21/W87

WTF, "Dave?" So, you tacked on a bunch of undescribed acronym things supposedly project numbers or IDs. Are we to be "impressed?" I'm not. I've worked alongside and for PhDs who didn't bother with IMAGE and all that rank-status-title BS...
WE got the job done, working together.

Amateur radio MIGHT get something done working together. But,
you olde-tymers won't. You have to RULE, holding fast to the traditions of 50 to 70 years ago...because YOU and all the
olde-tymers had to do it so everyone else has to...and all
you olde-tymer morsemen think that "CW" is somehow "best."
It isn't "best." If you really have a BSEE instead of just PR BS about morsemanship, you would realize that.

><http://www.strategic-air-command.com/missiles/Peacekeeper/Peacekeeper...>

"Dave," amateur radio isn't about missles. Save your energy
for donating DVDs of "Strategic Air Command" (starring Jimmy Stewart) to give to impressionable youngsters.

I've been in the smoke-and-fire trade of rocket engines for a little while (Rocketdyne Division of Rockwell International).
Trust me, rocket engines do NOT use manual radiotelegraphy.
BTW, SAC is GONE, "Dave." A whole reorganization in the USAF
some time ago. No more "oil burner routes" or flying out to loiter near the USSR (the USSR is gone, too). BTW, there were SSB transmitters emitting 12 KHz wide RF long before SAC got the single-channel SSB stuff to use on such
loitering. I know, having to keep a few of those REAL SSB
transmitters running correctly.

Now, "Dave," I can't fault on-off-keying CW any. The key fob for our 2005 Malibu MAXX uses that. Yes, the last vestige of high-speed CW (REAL CW) done digitally. Done
by the hundreds of thousands all over the country daily.
Nearly all of them operated by unlicensed NON-MORSE-TESTED
civilians! That Chebbie got in our garage courtesy of
"investments," "Dave." Investments in REAL work, not playing like big-time 1930s radio ops "jobs" of a long-
past age by AMATEURS.

Dee, the "rules that govern amateur radio" are the ENTIRETY
of Title 47 C.F.R. I don't care that the ARRL pushes ONLY Part 97. Part 1 has plenty about amateur radio as well as a few other Parts. Look it up. It's free at the US Government Printing Office website.

>The section
>on basis and purpose makes it quite clear that their objectives are quite >different.

The "objectives" of the FCC are to regulate and mitigate ALL
civil radio in the USA, Dee. That's what the Communications
Act of 1934 and the Telecommunications Act of 1996 chartered
them to do (plus quite a bit on wireline comms...which don't apply to amateur radio).

The "Basis and Purpose" has a lot of POLITICAL boilerplate
SERVICES. Get real.

> They want people knowledgeable in ham radio and who are >interested in expanding that knowledge.

FOLLOWING THE REGULATIONS, Dee. That's their job. The
THE REGULATIONS.

"George," you've got a whole bunch in this forum who think that amateur radio is some kind of veddy formal "JOB" with absolutes on THE WAY THEY DO IT. It's almost draconian in
the insistence of "correct proceedure." No one will get fired from that "job" if they don't use "correct" ways but

Horsepuckey. Dee, "George" is talking about GETTING INTO
amateur radio. Don't give us this olde-tymer morseperson
"I've operated all the modes there are" stuff. Dee, I've operated lots more modes on radio than YOU are allowed to
as an amateur.

Manual morse code ability IS an ARCHAIC mode of communications
Dee. ALL the other US radio services have either dropped it for comms or never bothered with it in the first place. ALL.
The ARRL and the olde-tyme morsepersons insist that the manual
morse test "MUST" remain to "show something" about commitment and dedication. To WHOM, Dee? To YOU? To da Hams in da hood?

>Notice
>that the majority of people advocating ditching requirements are those who >have not yet passed those requirements, regardless of their age.

Dee, before you get to the downright-bitchy stage, may I remind
you that some of us professionals in radio and electronics
in 1956. Considerably more testing involved than a ham license
test then. Could YOU get a GROL now? Could YOU get a job working with radio hardware?

>Note that
>the majority of people advocating keeping the requirements have passed them
>and have experience in amateur radio again regardless of their age.

Yes, nine-year-old Extras possess the maturity and wisdom of the ages, all through having taken that morse test and gotten
that magic certificate (suitable for framing).

>As far as "busy people" go, again refer to the basis and purpose as given in >the rules. The government is not concerned about your choice of how you use
>your time. It has no bearing on what their goals are.

Dee, you are LECTURING again. [just how long have you been
in ANY radio?]

Dee, go look at some 1990 documents on the creation of the no-code-test Technician license. There's a copy available for free download on the NCI website. Over 16 years ago the FCC
said outright that it didn't think the manual morse code test suited their purpose in granting an amateur radio license.
The FCC said the same thing in last year's NPRM.

I DO have to remind you that the FCC's only job is to REGULATE
all civil radio in the USA. Their only task is to do that and mitigate matters of interference with other radio services
(plus wireline but that's not concerning amateurs). Theirs
is not to brainwash hams...that's the ARRL's task.

>> Can you give me valid reasons as to what useful purpose in today's age

[stand by for the LITANY from the Church of St. Hiram]

>Every piece of knowledge has its uses. The difficult part is winnowing >through it and decide what should be tested and what should not.

Ahem, to olde-tyme morsepersons, manual morse code skill MUST
be tested for any radio privileges below 30 MHz. That's engraved in everlasting marble and protected by nuclear-blast
armor plate.

>Here's why I think code should still be tested:
>1. It is still one of the basic building blocks of ham radio.

Horsepucky. It was only the first mode used...had to be in the primitive-technology of early radio using "spark."
Spark is outlawed now, Dee.

> For example,
>one of the "hot" digital modes is PSK31. The developer drew upon personal >experience and incorporated features derived from that mode to make a robust

More sinning-by-omission, Dee. Peter Martinez, G3PLX, innovated PSK31. Using the available Information Theory rules he knew about, derived from commercial and military technology. It was
field-tested for years in Europe by many amateurs there before
it got any publicity over here. "Hot" is over a decade OLD,
Dee. In 1974 Peter was doing great things with polyphase networks for voice SSB...it was written up in RSGB's membership magazine. I doubt the ARRL bothered with publicizing it.

So...morsemanship really IS a barrier. You admit it.

>3. Each and every mode has its strong points and weak points. Each of us

Oh my, there we go on the lecture circuit again.

Dee, I started out working as an Illustrator. That's an artist who draws/paints things as they really are. I have an aptitude for that. It is as natural to me to draw, fairly well I might add, as a physically-endowed athlete is to sports or another
with a musical aptitude is to playing an instrument. The ability to "advance" in manual morse code skill is NOT a "natural" one but an aptitude in only a few of us. The US military even tested for that aptitude in all recruits of the 1940s and 1950s. [I got okay marks in that, by the way...:-)]

The first radio operators used manual morse code. First, it was fine for the primitive state of the art. Second, it was a mature
mode in the wireline communications, a technology even more primitive than radio of that time. Telegraphers weren't taken off the street...they either had the aptitude or they didn't.

Once "radio" got going, the telegraphers (downsized from wireline comms by those new-fangled teleprinter thingies) made much of their "abilities" using on-off-keying manual morse. The Morse Mythos was born and grew like wildfire. Good, good newsprint copy!

But, as time progressed there came NEW modes, much faster and more accurate, without need of morse specialists at each end of a circuit. The radio telegraphers were downsized. They retired and turned to amateur radio of pre-WW2 times. Morse was still king of the modes and ARRL (by the 1930s) was hailing the king as the "best" for all amateurs. None of this newfangled thing called "voice" for them although they did pay lip-service to it. By 1940 the ARRL was King of the membership organizations (through their publications) and they maintained that morsemanship was the epitome of amateur comms. They kept that up after WW2 and on into the single-channel SSB start in the 1950s...again paying lip-service to this newfangled SSB. And you know what? ARRL is STILL trying to promote morsemanship even if sinning-by omission once more.

Back before WRC-03 (that's over three years ago) the IARU took a position that the amateur radio license tests for morse ability was NOT mandatory...make it an option for each administration. Lots of folks went along with that, but NOT the ARRL. League was almost vehement in opposition. OK, the ITU-R amateur radio regulations were CHANGED, going along the lines of the IARU position. [that's the International Amateur Radio Union, Dee] Ah, but NOW the ARRL takes a neutral position, won't go either way...they just say that all amateurs must obey the law...but they lobbied last year to keep SOME manual morse testing for the under-30-MHz privileges. 92 years after being formed, the ARRL just can't give up and change to what OTHER folks want...

>the best mode.

"X-Files" was cancelled, Dee. [cousin Gillian got a vacation]

>However, unless you specifically want to know, I won't >clutter up the newsgroup at this time with discussions that have been >repeated many times by many people already.

Please, go on, Dee. I want to hear from your vast experience in radio and all your guru-like knowledge of what is "best" for radio amateurs. Especially WHY everyone has to emulate the olde-tyme amateur days, the ones before you were born.

Why not simply toss the "personal experience" gauntlet directly into her chops and challenge Dee to a battle of the electronic wits at sunrise? I'm sure it will do wonders for your machismo and, if it makes you feel that you succeeded in one-upmanshit, perhaps you can even send her to her corner, crying for mercy.
Go ahead, Len. Dazzle her with your brilliance and browbeat her if you can. There...don't you feel better already? Was the relief good for you? Feel vindicated?

I think he meant that someone was going to fly over him and shit on him like a pigeon.
My favorite part is where Mark says "stroll for flame". Does that mean he is a prostitute that gets paid in insults?

Poor Mark. When all else fails, resort to profanity. You've seemingly learned well from Wiseman, but you have a way to go.

Profanity, Mark, is the effort of a feeble mind to express itself, and so far you are the embodiment of a feeble mind.
"disgursting" is a neat and new word. I like it! From which dictionary did you glean that? Keep it going, Mark. It will take you but a few weeks to catch up to , and surpass, the hundreds of gross misspellings Wiseman has posted over the course of five years. I can see whereby the Roger Wiseman West Virginia Dictionary will very soon be replaced with the Mark Morgan Down Home List Of Stupidly Spelled Words.
Heck, Mark. Even Wiseman sometimes catches his "typos" and corrects them.
You have no such talent.

Now, Mark. About that glass basement you alluded to...is it cold in the winter? Do you have a phone down there? Maybe you should borrow some curtains from Roger...

there is no ethics involved here.

now a true ethical question:
can an unlicensed person using radio technology to violate part 15 still be in violation if he had a ham license (we're talking about using 802.11A at full power for a 10 mile shot folks!).

Your rudeness is clearly expressed in your one word response [above].

A more appropriate response, carrying the same meaning, but suitable for an open list, would be 'bovine defacation'!

No wonder Ham Radio is going the way of CB with people who express themselves so poorly and are unwilling to work for something they value.

What's "lomesting"? Is that letting them play in loam? They'd have a lot of it in your yard if they could get through the trash and junk scattered about.

Dave, he can't help it, his education is "limited" and doesn't know any better - due to NO EFFORT - effort as he said was bull shit too. So you can't expect much out of someone who has apparently made effort - to do something.

Mork the dork - The man is right - IT IS AN INVESTMENT - OR shall we assume your radios were given to you by the welfare office, paid for by pan handling on the street, or some other way which YOU didn't have to pay for them? ALSO - to get involved in such a hobby - ANY hobby - YOU MAKE AN INVESTMENT in time and well - whatever to enjoy it. We won't go with effort since it too is bull shit.

Dave Said:

>I'll say it again ... INVESTMENT!!

>If an activity is to have value it must have INVESTMENT.

Hi Dave,

Thanks for the replies, I surely didn't mean to get a flamewar going, but, it seems there are some very strong views on this.

I don't mind putting an investment into something...usually when I learn something new, I research and get into it 110%. The trouble with the requirements and all there that I see is, that it puts up a very high initial investment before you can actually get in and do anything with it. I guess I question, well how do I know it will be worth all the time invested before I even get to 'play'?

In my case, and I'm sure many others out there in this day in age, my TIME is what is of such short supply. I have no problem laying out cash for equipment...with most things I do, I generally jump in with both feet, buy equipment and 'learn as I go'. I'd like to do the same with ham and other radio technologies, but, in this case, I find a large wall in front of me of study and test taking, before I even get to jump on the air even once to see how much I'd like it.

Does that make sense to you?

Thanks for the replies,

noonespecial

I didn't look up any rules or sections of law anywhere, so I guess I'm answering a question blindly. I'm in Canada, but I felt compelled to answer even if I misunderstood the question.

I believe that government has written into law that a licensed ham should only use the power, or enough power required or necessary to communicate. Ten miles down the road is not a really great distance, contrary to what some CBers think, so maybe you could still use smoke signals to communicate unless you are then violating pollution-control laws, and or harming the tree environment/ecology system of the area by burning code into the sky.

I think that this part of the law still stands in Canada....that one should only use enough power to communicate whether it be an emergency or not.

If I missed your intention by 10 miles, please ignore this post. Thanks,

Jack

Most hammies I've met at hamfests and other venues would likely blast-away with wincing faces and shi+-eating grins even if the Queen of England was present in the room. Hams, for the most part, have no class, poor social behavioural skills and in general dress like bag ladies.

Hi Lloyd,

Thanks for the reply. Can you explain what SSB is to me, or post some informative links? I've seen ssb (single side band?) in the same breath/post as some CB radios. I'm not sure what it is, or what special equipment it takes. About all the info I can google points to radio communications at sea.

Can you use this on land? License and equipment requirements?

Thanks in advance for any info or pointers, I'm trying to learn about all this differences in publicly accessible radio.

I didn't look up any rules or sections of law anywhere, so I guess I'm answering a question blindly. I'm in Canada, but I felt compelled to answer even if I misunderstood the question.

I believe that government has written into law that a licensed ham should only use the power, or enough power required or necessary to communicate. Ten miles down the road is not a really great distance, contrary to what some CBers think, so maybe you could still use smoke signals to communicate unless you are then violating pollution-control laws, and or harming the tree environment/ecology system of the area by burning code into the sky.

I think that this part of the law still stands in Canada....that one should only use enough power to communicate whether it be an emergency or not.

If I missed your intention by 10 miles, please ignore this post. Thanks,

Jack

Example.

A few months ago a group of ham radio operators went into the central Pacific Ocean to an island named Swain's Island [ATOLL]. Swain's Island had just been approved by the Ham radio Certificate Powers {American Radio relay League] as a separate DX [distance] entity and as such it qualifies as an entry into the various DX awards [DXCC being the prime award}. [DXCC means you have submitted written proof of confirmed contacts with other ham radio operators in 100 or more other countries [or entities].

The Hams operated from this rare location for about a week and then returned home. There is no-one there today!

Let me digress into another of your questions: i.e. What is SSB?

Fifty years ago ham radio, and still today the AM broadcast band, transmitted three components to put a signal on the air. First, was the carrier that set the dial frequency e.g. 3950 KHz. The carrier contains NO information, it just sets the dial frequency. Then voice audio was added to the carrier. This addition [modulation] produced two audio signals around the carrier. One above the carrier, the other below the carrier. So, the resulting signal had the carrier and one upper side band and one lower sideband. The carrier contained 2X the power of the audio. And the audio was redundant with 1/2 the audio power in each sideband. The resulting signal can be described as Double Sideband Plus Carrier.

In the 50s and early 60s design techniques were incorporated to suppress the carrier, which contained NO information; and to eliminate one of the redundant sidebands. The resulting signal is Single Sideband [one audio channel] with suppressed carrier. [SSB = Single Side Band]

In lieu of any other meaningful test (and there currently is none), it shows a willingness to put in a minimum amount of effort.

You might ask that about anything. Given that <insert group here> like myself are stretched for time, what do all the requirements for <insert something here> do for anyone?

>I'm in a pretty technical field, and I study to keep up in that field everyday, the last thing I want to do,

So don't. Buy a CB, FRS or GMRS radio and talk all you like. Those are the services created for folks who just want to talk on the radio.

>If less stringent requirements were there, I could

You won't like that - you'll have to devote a lot of your precious time to learning things - electronics, both theoretical and practical, programming, reading a waterfall display, keeping your signal distortion-free ...

You can't just plug a radio into a computer and start using them.
Digital communications doesn't work if you do it that way.

>Can you give me valid reasons as to what useful purpose in today's age they serve?

No, since someone who wants instant gratification can't be bothered to listen to why that's the wrong way to do something. Your time is probably much to valuable to spend it learning enough to understand why you can't learn enough in an instant.

Go memorize some test answers, get a code-free tech, hook your computer up to your radio and, in 6 months, you'll have your radio up for sale on eBay, because "it doesn't really work".

Bummer.. well, there's a bunch of ways to test, flashing lights and other ways. If dyslexia is a problem, just have to get someone to read off the dit-dah sequences while you memorize them, or use a recorded audio lesson.
There's always a way!
gud luck,

A GMRS license costs money. A ham license costs study (time). Your choice. Either one lets you "talk on the radio".

It's a mode, like CW or FM. It's actually AM, with the carrier and one sideband chopped off (or never generated). No whistles, the same transmitter can handle more power, it punches through noise and interference better and, if you have a quadrature detector (sorry, Usenet isn't large enough to explain that in a post - you'll have to learn a little engineering), it's almost as good, for getting through, as digital or CW.

You can use it anywhere you can use AM (as far as ham and CB frequencies are concerned, anyway). Same license as any AM voice mode for the frequency. SSB transmitter. Receiver has to at least have a beat oscillator (BFO), but a SSB receiver is better.

then there is the problem of getting the VE to even discuss acomdation where I lived before they would not speak to me with a Doctor (md) dispite the fact the PHD's and MSW tend to dianose Dyslexia, then they want seris of test result and your medical records truned over the the ARRL all fo them for evaluation by NON medial people indeed we saw last year our own Steve Robeson making fun of the facts I was looking for the min osrt of testing that an MD could prescribe to dianose dyslexia

he has tormented me ever since for daring to try accomation

there indeed was a way but I was too honest to take since I got to the point where in some sessions I could sending, other session receiving, it was offered long ago when I was first trying that someone would simply scamble 2 session together and say I passed them both on the same day instead of 2 weeks apart as was realy case (btw getting to the stage where passing iether way was 1 in 4 coccourance took 4 years working 35 minute 5 day per week, and suffering through spliting headaches. It might be possible now but it aint worth it the FCC will act soon enough

Here's another:

BY AHMED Q. BURSALIID

In mid July 2005 The U.S. intelligence agents, working with local warlords, have carried out counter terrorist operations to seize sus&#65533;pects. "Somalia remains the theatre for a shadowy confrontation involving local Ji&#65533;hadis, foreign Al Qaeda operatives and in&#65533;telligence services from a number of re&#65533;gional and Western countries," says a report by the International Crisis Group in 2005. The report says the "dirty war be&#65533;tween terrorists and counter-terrorist oper&#65533;atives in Mogadishu appears to have en&#65533;tered a new and more vicious stage that threatens to push the country further towards Jihadism and extremist violence un&#65533;less its root causes are properly addressed."

The Somali transitional federal government was formed in neighbouring Kenya in 2004 and moved into Somalia June 2005. However, the administration has failed to relocate to Mogadishu, the Somali capital, because the city was considered unsafe. Due to the insecurity of Mogadishu, the TFG relocated to Jawhar, which it later decided to move to Baidoa.

Warlords and leaders of Islamic courts have been fighting in Mogadishu for about five months. This led to the loss of hundreds of civilians and destruction of properties. Somalia, which had been in a state of anarchy for more than a decade, has once again gone to war; this war was somehow different from previous ones. The nature of this war is seen to have some religious and political clash while previous ones were much related to tribal and feudal conflicts. Each one of the conflicting parties is claiming that the other group is related to Al-Qaeda when the reality is somehow different from that. After months of armed conflicts within the capital city of Somalia, Union of Islamic Courts took the lead with enormous points by eliminating the warlords who took hostage the country and its people for 16 years.

United States of America, which earlier denied any allegation of helping or giving hand to the warlords in the fight to weed out the Islamic Militia in Somalia shortly after the takeover admitted that it had been supporting warlords to destabilise the Islamic militia. America has been an active player in the politics of Somalia, and until now its policy towards restoring peace and stability in the war -torn Somalia is somehow obscure.

Somalis believe that it is the right time to take advantage to restore the lost hope of good governance in the country as Union of Islamic Courts led by Sheikh Sharif imposed law and order on Mogadishu, which was seen neither for 16 years. Hundreds of families from overseas countries returned back to Mogadishu, the capital city of Somalia since the takeover took place.

At first Transitional Federal Government welcomed the political change, which took place in Mogadishu as the Union of Islamic Courts disarmed a pack of US-backed warlords that took the country and its people hostage for more than a decade. But soon after the Islamic Militia started to capture some other cities, the TFG warned the Union of Islamic Courts of capturing farther cities. A big gap of political misunderstanding came in between the Transitional Federal Government and the Union of Islamic Courts, after the president of fragile Transitional Federal Government requested peacekeeping forces from the African Union. As the new Somali constitution inked in Kenya says, "Peacekeeping forces should not come from the neighbouring countries (Ethiopia, Kenya and Djibouti)". Likewise, the parliament passed a motion, which it was requesting peacekeeping troops to Somalia without paying attention to the classification of peacekeeping forces from AU countries and of front line countries. This has created an escalation of political crisis in Somalia. Ethiopia, which is the common enemy of Somalia has sent its troops to Somalia in an attempt to protect the Transitional Federal Government.

This time, Arab League took the political platform of Somalia to mediate
the two conflicting parties. TFG and UIC were invited to attend a mediation conference held on June 2006 in Sudan to settle their differences. After a reconciliation conference, presided over by Sudanese president Omar Hassan Albashir, the current chairman of Arab League, the reconciliation process derailed with unknown reasons but it is believed that Ethiopia was the main figure, which made the reconciliation process fail as the outcome of the meeting could not meet the criteria of Ethiopia's plan to Somalia and then, President Abdullahi Yusuf Ahmed, a well-known pro-Ethiopian warlord and his loyal prime minister Ali Mohamed Gedi, a vet scientist started to advocate the legality of Ethiopian Army presence in Somalia.

The Somalis are of the opinion that the involvement of Ethiopian Army in the peacekeeping operations in Somalia could cause havoc and deterioration of the political condition of the country in any case as Ethiopia is an old aged enemy of Somalia in East Africa. While a vast majority of the Somali public strongly opposed to deployment of Ethiopian troop into Somalia under any pretext, president Yusuf's political stance towards the deployment of Ethiopian troops in Somalia is clear and also in action by denying the presence of Ethiopian troops in Somalia just to protect his presidential seat.

Since the reconciliation conference in Sudan derailed a number of ministers resigned due to the political misunderstanding between TFG and
UIC. Prime minister declared that he would be nominating successors of the resigned 24 ministers. In addition to that, the prime minister himself survived after the Somali parliament passed a motion of no confidence against him recently.

Moreover, Prime minister of Ethiopia Milez zanawi whose government earlier denied any presence of Ethiopian troops in Somalia told BBC that his government has sent troops to Somalia to protect the Transitional Federal Government from the Union of Islamic Courts. While on the other hand, Eritrea is also believed to be an active supporter for the Union of Islamic Courts. Somalis believe that the support from both Ethiopia and Eritrea respectively is much related to a proxy war in between them.
US government warned Ethiopia and Eritrea stop the proxy war they are playing in the Somali territory.

If that were the case, I would design an olfactory DSP to be worn at all times in public. IT would be tuned to "rose"

The carrier is just there for setting a dial frequency? How about if one just transmitted ONE component, the carrier and then turned it on and off and regular intervals. It might be possible to use the on/off pulses to convey information, huh?

Those "design techniques" were used as early as about 1927.

Where is all this going?

pathological abuser of usenet, and people rightly despise you for it.
You're afraid of being reported to the authorities or, better, visited

obsessive fear. Ward Hardman himself has posted plenty of personal information - nothing that anyone else added was hidden in any way.
You're so fucking scared you've built up this whole sick mythology about

The time investment is not as much as it seems. That is even more true of someone who has experience in related fields or has experience in the art of studying. For those with some existing experience in related fields, they can often read up enough in a single weekend to pass the Technician written.
This will let you get your feet wet in the VHF/UHF and higher frequencies.
There's quite a lot that can be done in this area if you invest in the equipment.

Again if you have some related background, the General written is not particularly time consuming to study for either. The code is only as hard as you make it by fighting yourself. If you decide that you will learn it, the average person only needs about 30 hours to get to 5wpm, assuming that a good training method is used.

Getting the General license gives you all modes and all bands and the maximum power privileges. The only thing you do not get are some subsections on some of the bands that are reserved for Extra licensees.

Now the Extra test is quite a bit more difficult but is not required unless you want to get into those subsections mentioned above.

You spoke of "learning as you go". Basically ham radio is the same. Even the Extra class license has only scratched the surface of all that might be involved in amateur radio. The tests & licensing are to insure that you know enough not to get hurt, not to cause harm to other people, and not to make a mess on the bands. Also they are to insure that you have a grounding in the basics so you don't go spinning your wheels trying to get things working.

You might ask why this is important. Let's just address the safety area for a moment. Well for example, you can actually get a burn from grabbing an antenna that is being used to transmit. If you get into microwave transmissions, you could fry your eyes (or somebody else's) if you look into the end of a wave guide while it's being used to transmit. You can get electrical shocks from feedback due to a poorly set up station. This is just a small sample of some of the things that you should be familiar with.

the investment s not the same for different folks it can't be so the e;lcetircal engineer less of a ham for making a lessor investment?
that is the clear inplacation

indeed you have implied that My Wife is a more cabble member of the Tech the class because she had to wrok MUCH harder than me to get that

This is some of the very information that you will learn in studying for a license but here's the nickel tour.

An AM signal (like the radio stations use) has a center carrier frequency. This is modulated by the information (voice, music, etc). The result of this modulation is that two sidebands develop that are identical but are mirrored about the carrier frequency. All the information is carried in the side bands and both sidebands carry the same information. So the smart boys got to thinking and asked why do they actually need to transmit both sidebands (since they contain the same information) and why do they need to transmit the center carrier (which contains no information). They developed a way to eliminate the carrier and one of the side bands on the transmit end and a method to receive and convert it to useful sound at the receive end. This is called (ta-dah) Single Side Band. The main advantage of SSB over AM is that the transmitted signal is much narrower so more stations can fit in the same band width. An additional benefit is that because the signal is narrower, you can use a narrower filter and so reduce the amount of background noise receive with the signal. Since the carrier and one side band are eliminated before the signal power is boosted for transmission, you also end up with a stronger signal because the power is, in essence, focused on boosting a much narrower signal. For example, my radio gives me 100 watts out on SSB but only 25 watts out on AM.

Amateur radio operators use SSB as the commonest voice mode on HF (shortwave communications). Some hobbyists do use AM from time to time partly because they enjoy it and partly because of its historical significance. There is also SSB activity (as well as some AM) in the VHF and higher frequencies. Basically, in the amateur bands, it is legal anywhere that voice communications are legal. However in VHF and higher frequencies, there are band plans that one should follow on where to use SSB.

As far as equipment goes, you've got to read the specs. Some CBs (an unlicensed radio service) have SSB as well as AM. For amateur radio (a licensed service) HF voice transceivers, SSB is normally the standard mode with AM being an option that is available in most radios.

I will agree that he describes the gear much more glowingly than I. He has re-sold 3 of my radios. One went out on a Monday and it was listed Sunday.

DX simply means distance. If you are talking about HF transmissions, it normally refers to countries outside your own. If you are talking about VHF and higher, it can be within your own country but at distances beyond line of site communications.

The "DX community" is simply a term that refers collectively to those who are particularly interested and involved in the longer distance radio contacts.

I would like to add that DXing isn't limited to chasing awards. Some people just like to find someone in a foreign country to ragchew with. One day I was lucky enough to come across a gentleman in Italy who simply wanted to

I don't think he can get a TS merely for making empty threats to increase the Sacred Poast Count. Tim Brown set the bar for the TS award, and the bar remains high.

The term "investment" is very misleading. To explain my position, I am in agreement that CW testing should go the way of the dinosaurs. I have no problem with technical testing, as a way to ensure that potential Hams can operate their radios properly, without causing interference with neighbors and other Hams world wide. There is also a safety factor, with transmitters that can kick out a LOT of potentially dangerous power. So, technical exam = good idea.
Here in Canada, CW is not required IF you achieve at least 80% on your technical exam. You need at least 55% WITH CW.
http://strategis.ic.gc.ca/epic/internet/insmt-gst.nsf/en/sf08435e.html
This seems fair, to me.

As for the "investment", not all investments are valuable. I invested years of training to be a fully qualified mechanic. There is considerable value in that investment, obviously, as it is my bread and butter.

But, would my investment be more valuable if, for example, if an additional year of carpentry training were required for me to be certified? I mean, after all, cars had wood frames and bodies at one time so a mechanic would have needed carpentry skills...back in the 1930's. Such an investment would be a bad one. The skills would have no value and do nothing to enhance my skills as a mechanic. The extra investment would have no return with regards to being a mechanic.

Carpentry would not make me a better mechanic and would not prove to the world that I really wanted to be a mechanic.

CW is as useful to todays Hams as carpentry is to a mechanic. A good thing to learn, and potentially useful, but should not be a barrier.

But then again, a mechanic might need to do urgent bodywork on an 1930's wood-bodied ambulance and therefore save somebodys life. ;-)
{hehe...sorry..just had to pour on more coal..}
Just about as likely a scenario as CW being the only way to save a life.

But then, if I were stranded on a desert island and found some old war time aircraft wreckage, I could modify a magneto to be a spark generator and spark out an S.O.S. My mechanical skills help me there.

Well......could happen!!

Perhaps if RS didn't sell so much redundant Sprint Telephones, overpriced DVD players and TV's and their UTTERLY USELESS junk toys that start to appear each Labor Day and multiply right up till Xmas, their sales would rise. Personally however I would not miss them if each and every RS were to close and the company was to go the way of FW Woolworth.
Most of the stuff you can get at RS you can usually get at Walmart for 50% less price anyway, plus Walmart employees are usually a tad more intellegent than your average Radio Shack stooge.

Well slow code, the new users would be sharing them with you, IF you act nice. Remember, there would be more no subbands. I am very impressed with your 20wpm extra! I'm just a lowly 13 wpm advanced, not smart enough to get that extra mumbo -jumbo..... I know you're much smarter than me.

I will say this sincerely. Would you care to move this qso to 40 or 80 meters? I do mean CW,ofcourse. I'm a little on the rusty side and am still using my old vibroplex. But I'll be dam if I can't light a lucky strike and not miss a beat. And I don't copy with a fucking computer either. It's in my head or when I was working it was copied with a manuel type writer.I can tell if a wuss is sending with a computer,humans can't send that perfect and KEYERS don't count!

Now slow code what ya say? oh BTW, did I mention I worked at WCC for more years than I care to remember. You newer guys should look up WCC,,,,,,,,,,was pretty cool for it's time.

Hey Slow Code ....people could record it and even the no-coders could use there computers to watch me make an ass of you on the much loved CW mode!

Well??
Shit or get off the pot,blow-hard.

Yeah, yeah, yeah, old news. What's he claimed lately? Is there any reason I should be more interested in him than you aside from your dislike of 'im? Revenge nominations are frowned on in AUK, and that would extend to such nominations brought about through preferential treatment of one kook over another.

And what's your big problem with "demonic" people, anyway?

I see you fell out of the stupid tree and hit every branch on the way down.
What do you know about talent? Shania was probably singing in bars and resorts with her guitar to pay the bills before you were even born, that was how she got noticed. It had nothing to do with BJ's, she doesn't stoop to your momma's level.

Wrong, Markie.
Lardass Lloyd Davies is just a pizza delivery BOY, and takes orders from a much younger Manager. BWHAHAHAHAHA!

I'm not sure I recall all the other posters idea of investment - but "mine" - was referring to the time/cost how ever little - "spent" or "Invested" - if you will - in the way of time to study or prepare for the exam - acquire equipment AND to actually go on the air to make use of it.
So - yes it "can" be looked as an investment - even if in a "minimal" sense of the word.

IN the way I "think" you're referring to - as an investment towards a "rewarding career" or leap forward into life - eh - depends on the person.
Many do NOT make electronics their lifes work. BUT, many have started from ham (some from CB and then ham) and went on into some electronics or electrical field. So for "them" - it "was" an investment of sorts - into their future.

Just like another part of this thread where "memory and memorization" was being used, hacked, slanged - the word "investment" could also go that direction. It is all in how you want to look at it and perceive it.

Just my 2 cents!

If this is true, it isn't so surprising - a few stores have closed locally. Many are not as busy as they once were and I suspect "might" be going the same way in the near future. "SOME" things are still able to be gotten there that Wal-Mart doesn't supply - BUT - then again - those are the things which "experimenters", "builders", "technicians", "radio enthusiasts" would buy. ALL ELSE - is "Wal-Mart" related type items. Heck - even "Wal-Mart" sells phone plans now for at least a couple companies but they don't hound you when walking in the door to buy one. "IF" Wal-Mart sold "ALL" items that RS handled and "Cheaper" - yeah, I think RS would go DOWN.

Lets not give Wal-Mart TOO much credit here - I hear they're not doing so well all the sudden - either. The local store - ranked one of the top sellers in the nation - parking lot and aisles always full of shoppers, bringing in "millions" a day (data acquired from a good source) - is laying off people, cutting back hours, freezing pay raises, etc. AND I hear that is a trend across the nation in "Wal-Mart". So - even that giant may be coming to it's knees. My question on this issue, is I wonder if it has anything even remotely related to do with the "mexican" hiring policies they were busted on? A retaliation of having to pay "higher" wages to Americans - or shall we say "Legal" residents? They closed a store down in Canada when the people there wanted to form a "union" - so I heard in a news column. Sure makes you wonder. Its amazing what the holder of the wallet can do!

It is interesting (in a sad way) to see these big companies going belly up or at least having woes..... It makes you wonder where we are actually headed. HERE - Wal-Marts ARE one of the biggest employers. If they go out - the unemployment rate will be higher than George Bush Jr. can count. Almost as high as his deficit.
I know Wal-Marts and yes some others too - already gone by the way side - have been accused of killing off the Mom and Pop stores, but the whole picture just plain SUCKS.

I guess the adage applies - it IS a "Dog eat dog" world out there.

That might be so, UnWiseman, but YOU could get one of those. I can see it now--some guy comes in for batteries and you unleash a torrent of filth about his mother and children, followed by a graphic description of various homosexual acts.

C'mon, Rog. It'd get you out of the house and offer you a chance to interrelate with members of the human race on a face-to-face basis.
I'm sure it would help to reduce your sociopathic problems.

Hey, "Dave," since when does the FCC mandate all hams MUST "work DX?" [try to remember that "the DX community" does NOT issue/grant/authorize amateur radio licenses, only the FCC]

"Working DX on HF with CW" is an OPTION, not a requirement.

In fact, the FCC doesn't even mandate 'working' a foreign radio amateur at all. ['foreign' meaning any country outside USA jurisdiction]

>It's your choice: if you want to play the DX game learn the rules including 25 >wpm CW.

"Dave," you really need to be reminded that the FCC does NOT mandate/require/encourage ANY "DX contacts." Neither does the "DX community" grant any licenses OR make any "rules" that ALL US radio amateurs must follow.

Oh, and "Dave," the REAL US amateur radio regulations require passing a FIVE WORD PER MINUTE (equivalent) manual telegraphy test (15 words per minute with the "farnesworth" approved equivalent rate), not "twenty-five words per minute."

"Dave," have you been licensed a long time? I don't recall ANY FCC requlations requiring a "twenty-five" rating, only the OLD regulation (prior to mid-2000) and that only for Extra class. I'd say you really ought to review the latest rules that apply in this new millennium. You can review those for free at the United States Government Printing Office website under "Code of Federal Regulations." You can also get it at the ARRL website since the ARRL seems to think they are the only "official" source for everything amateur...

>If you want to operate an appliance, but an appliance.

You mean EVERYONE "following the rules of the DX Community" uses homebuilt radios? All have built their own keys so that they don't use appliance keys? Amazing...

How does anyone "but an appliance?" :-)

Dee, the "time investment" for MORSEMANSHIP depends entirely on the psycho-acoustical aptitudes of the learner. "Learning" a psycho-acoustic skill is NOT an intellectual one, it is a physical one.

>That is even more true of

You morsepersons need to get a common story. The rabid morsemen keep saying it is all "memorization," taking no skill whatsoever.

>This will let you get your feet wet in the VHF/UHF and higher frequencies.

Come right out and say it...you morsepersons consider the frequency world above 30 MHz to be beneath you, a place for kids and lids (and probably space cadets) to go and PLAY.

>Again if you have some related background, the General written is not Everyone can just "memorize" the answers, right? :-)

The ARRL VEC uses the "farnesworth" method which send at FIFTEEN words per minute...even though the FCC regulations have five.

Dee, you haven't addressed the subject of the existance of the manual morse code test itself. You (erroneously) think that it is "necessary," possibly because you had to take that test.

>Getting the General license gives you all modes and all bands and the Extra class are the "elite." Having an extra license allows all the preening and self-righteous attitudes possible in a hobby activity. It is personally rewarding to elitist-wannabes who have to be "better than ordinary persons."

>You spoke of "learning as you go". Basically ham radio is the same. Even

Really? All those extras in here seem to think they are FAR better than any professionals in radio...because they had to test for morsemanship.

Golleee! All along I thought the FCC just regulated (and mitigated interference) in ALL US civil radio. Their predecessor agencies (before 1934) used Licensing and Testing for same as a REGULATORY tool. I didn't know that those were also academic tests and diplomas...

>You might ask why this is important.

Why IS morsemanship so important?

> Let's just address the safety area for a moment.

FCC amateur radio regulations cover only the radiated RF power field. As a safety issue for ALL affected by that RF field. Does YOUR station obey the federal regulations?

>Well for example, you can actually get a burn from grabbing an

Why would anyone do that? [anything in official rules on that?]

>If you get into microwave

Why would anyone do that? You can get far worse damage to the eyes looking into a laser beam of much less power...and you don't need any license for that.

>You can get >electrical shocks from feedback due to a poorly set up station. This is >just a small sample of some of the things that you should be familiar with.

Those aren't covered in FCC regulations, are they?

"Feedback gives one shocks?" I suppose...I've made feedback networks for years and never been "electrically shocked" by them. Delighted and surprised that they worked so well, perhaps, but never got any electrical shocks from feedback.
I guess I'm just not "amateur" enough...hi hi :-)

"Dave," your knowledge of Single Sideband is ferklempt.

The spectra of an amplitude modulated signal was mathematically described by John R. Carson of AT&T before the 1920s. SSB, including suppressed carrier, was USED by the telephone infrastructure in the 1920s for long-distance lines. The most common system, "C Carrier," had four separate 3 KHz voice channels and would operate on the open-wire telephone lines then common all over the world. This "C Carrier" was directly adapted to HF radio in the early 1930s, the frequency-multiplexed total signal converted to HF and amplified. The first HF SSB radio link was put into service between the Netherlands and the Netherlands Antilles carrying four voice channels or (to become the later commercial-military standard of two voice and six to eight TTY channels). While single-channel SSB was experimented with before WW2, it didn't expand until after WW2 and a number of US military contracts awarded to then-prominent radio makers (Collins, RCA as two examples). Based on that success, the amateurs took it up in the 1950s while the ARRL promoted the false idea that "SSB was pioneered by radio amateurs."

Technically, your statement was faulty. Each "sideband" (the spectra adjacent to the carrier) carries ONE QUARTER of the total RF power output of single-channel SSB, not "half" in normal AM. In normal AM the carrier is always constant in amplitude. In normal AM receivers the "detector" stage is a mixer, combining the carrier with the two sideband spectra with the output lowpass filtered to yield the original audio signal. Single-channel SSB usually suppresses the carrier (almost to extinction) and the "detector" stage being fed an equivalent constant-amplitude carrier signal from an internal receiver oscillator. The mix products of carrier re-insertion and the input single sideband spectra yield the original audio modulation after lowpass filtering.

The important thing about single-channel SSB is that a transmitter peak power output of RF need only be one-half to on-quarter of a conventional AM transmitter to yield the same demodulated audio signal level.

No morsemanship skill is necessary to use a single-channel SSB radio. Today it is being used on the open sea by both commercial and private boat/ship owners for voice communications; also data, separate or multiplexed, for written communications.

At this stage of his fraudulent claims, without ever having presented ANY third-party references or documents or even personal photographs, he is caught up in his own conundrum.

If Robeson comes clean and ever shows any documentation now, he is in for tons of remarks of his past claims that he can never weasel out of, not even with the gratuitous personal insults he normally uses against challengers.

If Robeson continues on his fraudulent claims, then he is only repeating his present behavior, convincing no one, and building only his own warped fantasy. The rest of us will be stuck with his personal blog output.

The duties of the Tennessee STATE Guard (not affiliated with the National Guard) were described by them as a sort of in-Tennessee 'custodian' of NG facilities if and only if the NG there is activated into federal service plus being a sort-of 'military police' for that state. As quasi-MPs they would have some ability to access federal records to confirm Robeson's military service. On the other hand, the TN STATE Guard will (by their own statements) accept membership by civilians.

The morsemen have been so brainwashed into believing their own efficacy in radio that it is impossible to "win" anything, certainly not with the ARRL publishing house constantly implying that morsemanship is the "best" skill an amateur could have.
Amateur morsemen are so wrapped up in their personal skill that they are unable to come to terms with any amateur or professional radio person who doesn't care for it. To them, US amateur radio is ALL ABOUT manual radiotelegraphy. Tsk.

The purpose of Private auctions is just that - private. As in not public.

For example, where I work, we have a yearly "sell off some old computers to the employees" thing. We have used eBay private auctions for this. Only our employees can bid - not the general public.

No? You mean you can't buy a rig from HRO, unbox it, and

There's several transceivers on the market that DO that, Big Al. Have you kept up with radio technology since

Is eBay where you sold your radios, Big Al? :-)

Hey, Big Al, have you written the QPC yet about those simple, easy-to-memorize questions on writtens? No? Why not?

Have you written the FCC yet about the anyone-can-get-a-ham-license and tell 'em "what for?" [it's easy to submit a petition to get back to them good ol days you want, FCC tells you the procedure on their website] No? Why not?

Maybe you ought to write your congressperson, then. Tell THEM that US amateur radio testing has gone down (your imaginative) toilet and DEMAND that something be DOME about it!

You sure are ANGRY about things, Big Al. Maybe you need some tranquilizers or mental therapy? No, you say? Okay, then I'll

Yeah, really! Sheeesh..... Just because they do CW doesn't mean they misspell. Conditions are one thing - Piss poor spelling is another. Just because the brain is "supposed" to be able to decipher codes and some sentences even if misspelled, doesn't give you (Morkie) the absolute right to act like an asshole and keep typing stupid shit. Maybe it is Morkie who can't comprehend what they're saying. HELL - he can't spell to start with. At least that is what I've gotten from all the examples I've seen. How did you EVER pass the tests?

If you spelled like that all through your eh - learning years, I'm willing to bet you bombed in school. Between what I've seen in the news group(s) and on your web site - wow! Use a damned spell checker. At least that "effort" will make you appear "a" little brighter. Oopps, I forgot, you (Morkie) don't know what "effort" is. You remind me of the dork in Rec.Antique Radio and Phono - always being a pain in the ass to people. He hardly ever makes any sense - even if he does spell correctly, which in this case, I'll give HIM credit for at least that - spelling correctly.

This is a major problem at RS and what I want I can't you can't get it at Wally World.

When I go to RS, I am usually looking for something like a BNC connector, or some 3.7 Kohm resistors or somesuch thing.
Most of the time the employees are nice, but they don't have a clue about what I'm asking for.
Those little drawers of parts in the back aisle are usually picked over and half empty.
The RS employee will then look up the part you want ($2.49 for two 1/4 Watt resistors plus $8.95 special shipping, over ten dollars for what used to be a 49cent part and you have to wait days to get it.

>> RadioShack uses e-mail to fire employees

This is cold and Major NOT NICE! This lack of caring, of correct behavior is what has driven RS down.
